First off, I could not find your "Get Connected Tab", so I'm leaving my comment here. I feel the Forest Service should use ONLY existing corridors for overhead transmission lines. If it takes more lines, so be it. Secondly, or maybe it's in the first place, I feel overhead lines are passé. All transmission lines should be undergrounded. This cuts down on forest fires from broken lines; stops the unsightly poles and lines from intruding on our forests; and stops fallen poles and lines in storms. I know the undergrounding is more expensive, but over the life expectancy of the project, this would be minimal. Thank you. Janice Flanagan
