The most helpful scoping comments are those that focus on resource issues and identify information such as: 1) specific resource concerns; 2) data that should be included in the analysis; 3) project design elements that meet the purpose and need statement and should be considered in the range of alternatives; and 4) best management practices, standard operating procedures, or mitigation that would help reduce impacts.

Someone said that they have 8 million Dollars to spend. That is pennies when you are involved in a project that BIG. Think about it! 1 D9 Caterpillar cost 1 million Dollars. A 992 Loader cost 1 million Dollars. They will be out of money before they get started buying equipment to do the job. Why are they buying up land? That can be sold after the mine is gone and so they can park their junk and line their pockets? You and others will pay for this project, not only financially, it will decimate the land, the wild life, everything that you and I love. With these men that make the money, comes homeless people, trailer trash, hookers, robbery and personal property destroyed. Not to mention the trash and beer cans along the scenic route to Warm Lake. The noise from the machinery will be heard everywhere. The blasting will be heard all over the Valley. This isn't Homestake Mining Company, the largest & oldest in the United States, it's the Canadians trying to make money off of US and don't give a crap what they do to our land. No mine in the U.S. has 1000 to 1500 people working it. Check the BIG mines out in Nevada. There is an open pit mine in Silver City IDAHO. They say there is 2 million ounces of gold there. They tore the mountain in half and LEFT. Will they do that to you?
