

Hello,

I have watched the Midas story for ages, and I think it's wonderful that someone wants to clean up the environment besides sticking the taxpayers through the federal government. Also, I think it's wonderful that the fish runs will be able to resume as they were for millenia. It's really nice to see private enterprise combine a really strong and economic project with environmental cleanup. I am old enough to have lived through WW2 and I realize we did what we had to do to survive including doing nasty mining and not cleaning up properly. But this project will pay for all the work as well as return to investors a good return on their money.

It appears Midas has gone out of their way to keep the public relations up and keep the area people informed. Now it's time to let them run with the ball and start getting ready to build a good and healthy business. People need jobs and they would be doing the area a service while making a good living. Let's bring the time for scrutiny of the planned work to a close and get on with actual work. If they do half what they have planned, it will be wonderful for the area. Let's get on with cleanup and repairing what needs repairing like the fish runs.

I am an outdoor guy and have fished and hunted all my life - not only in my home state but in every Rocky Mountain state. Let's clean things up!

Thanks,
