

I have reviewed Perpetua Resources' plans and just as I did before, I feel very comfortable with the modifications that have been made to the plan.

There is a site in our forests that is a disaster, thanks to old mining practices. Today, we have a company with an exceptional plan that will clean that site and turn it into a productive mine that will provide America, and the world, with much needed minerals. Perpetua has worked with the government to set new standards that will turn this project into an example of how to do things right. I am very proud that it will be happening in my Idaho backyard.

The Stibnite Project is what the world needs, and to have it right here in Idaho will be a boost to Idaho and the nation. We will have an antimony resource that is available here in the US, not to mention a productive place to mine gold and other important minerals.

This has been an incredibly long process that has gone from an excellent project to a superior project. I would like to encourage the U.S. Forest Service to permit this project, using the 2021 Modified Mine Plan presented by Perpetua Resources in the SDEIS, as expeditiously as possible.

elizabeth jones