

The Stibnite Gold project is a great example of a company doing their best to clean up a mess left by Government while developing minerals critical to the country. Despite the claims by environmental groups, this project has already and will continue to improve the water quality and fish habitat in the receiving waters.

Approval of this project in a timely manner will hasten the continued clean up of the river and provide jobs, taxes, and metals needed by the state and country.

Alan Morris