

The only way I would support the Stibnite Gold Project is if they create a "mitigation endowment" that they pay into as they go. My nephew was a summer Bio-tech and did stream surveys there and the old mine's tailings continued to do damage decades after mining ceased.

I'm not thrilled with the "reducing the size" so water temperature treatment can be avoided. Does this mean it won't be monitored?

I don't want to be a Luddite, but historically mining operations have an atrocious environmental record. So I support this new proposal with reservations and in a very limited way.
