Dear Mr. Dewberry,

I am writing in regards to the Chiricahua Public Access Project. I regularly enjoy hiking, birding, backpacking, and exploring in the Chiricahuas.

I think this Access Project project is unnecessary. There are already plenty of access points for cars most places in the Chiricahuas. Almost all major canyons have roads and access. What we need is more canyon we can hunt and recreate in with less roads and motorized traffic. It's nice and easy to access Juhn Long Canyon on foot and the wild nature of the canyon is best preserved from the disruption of a new road.

Increased activity due to a new road could lead to increased fire danger, migrant smuggling, and invasive species, among other issues.

Thanks for listening to my input.
