Comments: wilderness areas

I disagree with the areas being proposed as wilderness area around the Tucson area such as bugs canyon, millagrosso and others as these areas are too small to be considered as wilderness and do not have wilderness qualities. The easy access makes them less than wilderness as wilderness should be something you work to get to. It seems once again that the federal government, ie blm forest service are just trying to eradicate mountain bikers and it usually is the plan of a few too long in the tooth career employees who are just trying to exact an unfounded vendetta against one user group. You need to stop this s_ _ t as there are no bad trails, no bad bikers only bad federal employees. As a resident of Moab, Utah, we are seeing the same thing, 20+ year employees who hate bikes and do anything they can to stop them. Then across the border in Colorado, younger fed employees embracing recreation in all its form with great success and none of the bad side effects you seem to invent. Remember, these lands belong to the people and they have the right to use them. Leave these area uses as is, as they are not damaging or hurting anything.....
