The Wayne needs to assess the impacts of inevitable fracking accidents, including well pad fires, such as the one this weekend in ND. See also the attached USEPA report of the June 2014 Monroe, Ohio Eisenbarth well pad fire. These impacts must be included in the Wayne's required NEPA analysis of fracking, which has never been done for the Wayne National Forest.

MCKENZIE COUNTY, N.D. - UPDATE (5:50 p.m.): The McKenzie County Sheriff's Office says they were notified of an oil well fire at 10:20 a.m CDT. Authorities say 911 calls reported black smoke, ground shaking and numerous explosions.

The oil well pad had about 27 tank batteries, 16 crude oil tanks and 10 water tanks on location. A tank containing 50 barrels of crude oil at the time of the incident was contained inside the dike of the well pad.

The Keene Fire Department, McKenzie County Ambulance and McKenzie County Sheriff's Office responded.

ORIGINAL STORY: Whiting Petroleum Corporation out of Denver confirmed that multiple tanks caught fire Saturday in McKenzie County north of Watford City by the Missouri River.

Witnesses say there was an explosion. A Whiting official says it was a fire.

Ashley McNamee of Whiting says no one was seriously injured and the fire was contained quickly.

She says it happened on the K-Wold 41-5 well site.

McNamee says 10 contractors are being medically reviewed as a safety precaution.

The location is shut down and McKenzie County law enforcement is still on scene.

The cause is under investigation.
