Comments: The Stanislaus national forest in my opinion has the best terrain anywhere in California for over snow riding. I spend multiple days a year in the Sanora pass area with my friends and son. My father brought me here after I learned to ride snowmobiles in the mammoth lakes area. By closing most of this area to over snow recreation you will be taking away almost all of the premier riding that California has to offer. I really hope that you will take into account this comment and I am sure the many others you have received and keep all of this terrain open for OSV use. Most of the sierras has already been designated as wilderness please don't take away what we have left to ride I really hope to share this amazing country with my son and the only way to access these areas feasibly during the winter is by snowmobile. I am all for land use designations but there are already millions of acres designated to wilderness and not many designated to OSV usage. I state again please do not close these areas to OSV usage. the number of people that access these areas in the winter is already small by closing them no one will be able to enjoy these areas feasibly and safely. We all just want to go ride snowmobiles and ski like the photo below.. Please do not close the terrain you plan to..
