Comments: I am an entomologist with a degree in environmental biology as well. I have concerns regarding protection of all the streams in the watershed area of the proposed logging.

Oversite of the project- I am concerned with the possible lack of protection of "all" of the watershed within the proposed logging area. Needless to say, there is water flowing above any stream visible. It all starts there. Recovery could be centuries long.

Who is doing the monitoring of the stream health of all effected areas? Is it an outside person not associated with the loggers? Can the public choose a service to do the monitoring and the logging business pay for that monitoring independent of the logging business?

Business is often all about the $$ and cutting corners including monitoring of stream and other forest health. There should be no cutting of corners. Insects are the most important order of animals on the planet. Without them, we would all be dead. Without them, a forest would be dead as well.
