Comments: Something to consider

Currently there are more than 550,000 abandoned mines that pose a significant environmental threat and the EPA estimates will cost >$50 million to clean up. However, no one is being held responsible for these abandoned mines, and there are limited funds available for remediation, which places the burden on the communities being affected. <https://rnrf.org/2022/02/revisiting-the-1872-mining-law/>
