Comments: Off-road vehicle recreation stands out as a transformative outdoor activity that not only benefits a wide range of enthusiasts but also significantly enhances accessibility for individuals with mobile disabilities. By embracing adaptive technology, improving trail infrastructure, and fostering inclusivity, public lands can continue to provide a platform for diverse communities to connect with nature and enjoy the many benefits of off-road exploration.

That was from the organization I belong to. This is from me. OHV exploration allows myself and others to see and feel the great outdoors. We drive into remote areas that can't be accessed with on road vehicles. Then enjoy the best the nation has to offer. We hike, bike, camp and commune with the outdoors. Our groups always adhere to the Tread Light believe. We pack out what we pack in. Also, we never leave the designated roads and trail system. Most of the ORV community leave an area better and cleaner than we find them. I feel our area access has been limited enough to public lands. I also feel that the limitations will encourage people who don't share our love of the land. They will and already are entering closed areas to see how much they can destroy. Much like the graffiti in the cities. I like to think of off-road community as the Neighborhood Watch of the wilderness. When we witness such atrocities, we try and stop it, and we do report them, many times with photos and/or videos.
