Comments: Cabins don't belong in designated Wilderness. The U.S. Forest Service must leave its policy unchanged and phase out ANILCA cabins, as was the original intent. These cabins were never meant to persist in Wilderness, and to change this policy would undermine ANILCA and the Wilderness Act. To me and my children and grandchildren, the wilderness is for the animals, not humans. They lose territory everyday and it's never given back to those that had it first!
