Comments: How does a plan being presented today incorporate the concern and requirements by the three County Commissioners, and why were these concerns dismissed?

One of the major issues we're dealing with as a country today is border issues. You know, we have hundreds of thousands, millions of people coming across our borders illegally into this nation. The issue with that is this, our country as a whole is a sovereign country, there's only one way you can come into this country, and that's legally. That's the issue that's on the table nationally now with our borders.

And the point that Doug brought up about our Constitution is the issue because, constitutionally, there is no place in the Constitution for the Forest Service, BLM, any of these government agencies to come into a sovereign state legally and manage our resources. There's no place in the Constitution for that. So how can the Forest Service, BLM, whatever agency it is that's representing the United States Government, how can they, righteously, legally stand before the citizens of individual states and proclaim that they have a right to be there? That we're dealing with is illegal people, or agencies in this case, coming into sovereign states and claiming it as their own. The Forest Service needs to read the Constitution, that's what you need to, because you're here illegally. You should not even have a plan here. What are we talking about? This deal with the Forest Service Plan, they have no legal plan.
