Comments: My issue is I would like to see the Forest Service, as well as any governmental entity begin the conversation from the supreme law of the land, which is the Constitution. I think we err in our problem-solving techniques because we don't start from the right premise, and I would urge the Forest Service and the County Commissioners that are present, any governmental entity, to begin the conversation by, one, looking at what are the rightful jurisdictions that we're dealing with, and then from that we can leapfrog into looking at specific use of the land.

I don't see anywhere in the Constitution where the government needs to own all this property.
