Comments: My concern is on some of the range designation, that's usually done in a local area, and that was really planned out in this one.

Also, the vegetation, the height. And some of the vegetation wasn't our local area, and height restrictions for vegetation, especially on range land, is a little concerning because it wasn't locally regulated, it was done in the Forest Plan. That's not usually what occurs, especially if you look in other states like Idaho, that's done on the local level. So we need to really look at that. Vegetation height in the range area, and what we're doing to manage the vegetation and the fire risks by removing that, the range and the dead timber, you're actually increasing your fire risk instead of decreasing it. So we need to make sure we don't increase the risk while trying to over manage the land and property without certain funding.
