Comments: Please do not deprive future generations of this last bastion of wildlife, you have no right

So you are quietly planning to cut down the last remaining old growth forest. While the public in the lower states focus on fighting the oil companies and while no one notices what you have been doing.

How long do you think that forest will last? How many years of logging do you think you can do before it is all gone? How much devastation would you like to register to your names for a a few years of that all mighty $?

The Tongass offers the country's largest remaining swath of ancient forest, as well as an estimated one third of the world's remaining temperate rainforest. It is the last bastion of life not destroyed by humans. It is far past time for an end to old-growth logging and destruction of habitat essential for endemic species found only in this biologically rich region.

Please leave it alone, before that is all gone too?
