Comments: I strongly oppose further mining in the headwaters of the the Salmon river system. I haver frequently flown over this area and spend time on the rivers. What small economic benefit it might provide is overwhelmed by potential impact. There is always the argument that the disruption and toxicity can be isolated and contained, until it isn't. The present Stibnite scar will remain for a century or more. The South Salmon and its tributaries are a state and national treasure. There is no reasonable argument for short term economic gains at the expense our grandchildren.
