Comments: I am surprised by the scope of the project. I do not feel there has been enough consideration given to the owners of Warm Lake Cabins. The Artis family cabin has always given me fond memories of when I was a kid, going there with my parents, and then into early adult hood and now bringing my family there. To have so many trips by trucks up and down the mountain, plus construction workers personal vehicles it will be like rush hour here in Conn. There should be transportation provided to the workers to alleviate traffic, the hours of operation should be cut, thus allowing the peace and tranquility to return. Being in construction myself, I understand the need to be productive during working hours, but I am also restricted to certain hours of operation as not to disturb the surrounding area. I also worry about the traffic this project will create- which leads to more accidents, deaths and possibly forest fires when the trucks breaks catch on fire coming down the mountain. At this point production will stop, there will be delays and us owners will not get to our destination. There should be pull outs made, run-a -way truck "stops" all to allow a more fluid passage of cabin owners and guests. I hope the construction vehicles/trucks are using clean diesel to keep the air from getting fouled, stick log books kept on the drivers so not to exceed allowable time behind the wheel. What about the infrastructure ? Is there going to be more police/fire/ems crews hired? Who is going to watch the cabins for break-ins when the owners are not there? The mining company- are they going to share any of their wealth/profit with the cabin owners? I am all for business, it is the American way, but not at the expense of land owned for many generations of families, to make a company from another country rich. Cut the trips up and down, cut the hours of operation and keep traffic moving on the mountain for those who have investment in Warm Lake. We do not have enough pure air and water left, please do all you can to allow my kids more memories and for their kids as well
