Comments: I am a avid single track rider and off road motorcyclist. I learned to ride a dirt bike when my father used to take my brother and I riding in southern California. These riding trips fostered a deep family bond that still holds my family together, as I am beginning to teach my children to ride, camp, take care of each other and their community. I still make a yearly pilgrimage back to these riding areas now that I am in my 40s. Currently our closest quality single track experience is on the north side of Marana, a booming town with massive economic development. Almost every weekend I take my children to Marana along with their bikes and my money, which gets spent in restaurants and shops in a portion of southern Arizona that is having no trouble at all economically. It strikes me that building these trails will serve to build an economic draw to the region as well as developing a an anchor for the local community. As a person who lives close to this area and as an Arizona Law Enforcement Officer I fully support this project.
