Comments: One of the most important qualities of Forest Service land is the quiet. Places where silence may be found are becoming increasingly hard to find. The use of motorized vehicles ruins silence for humans and other animals. Additionally, fossil fuel emissions from motorized vehicles reduces the air quality of forest service areas for humans and other animals. And motorized vehicles often leave the roads or trails and damage plants, soils, and other life forms. The Forest Service has become very generous in allowing motorized vehicles in the new management plans and I object to this for the reasons stated.
