Comments: Cement creek, Italian mountain, timberline trail, doctor park, etc areas are one of the few remaining motorcycle trail area open on national forest lands. One of the reasons they are so popular is because there are trails that you can ride all day without having to ride the same trail. I routinely make the 3 hour drive to ride these legendary areas and every time we ride them , we Drum into other motorcycle riders from all over the United States that have heard about these trails and want to ride with us.

I started riding these trails in the early 1980s when it was all open to motorized use. One of the things I've noticed is because motorcycles are now limited to a few trails, they get heavily used. There needs to be more riding opportunities for motorcycles in this area. I'm in my mid 50s and the only way I can get out to these beautify area is on motorcycles. My son and I have spent numerous weekends camping and riding these areass.
