

Data Submitted (UTC 11): 4/8/2018 1:15:42 PM

First name: Rikki

Last name: Holcomb

Organization:

Title:

Comments: Please do not sell off the Ruby Mountains for drilling of any kind. I wholeheartedly agree with these statements from the Center for Biological Diversity. We cannot let greed destroy our most precious heritage, the planet.

"The Rubies are an iconic emblem of the Silver State's wild heritage, and we can't let them be ruined for corporate profits. The Forest Service shouldn't let oil companies drill or frack a single acre of this incredible natural treasure."

The Ruby Mountains, in the Humboldt-Toiyabe National Forest of northeast Nevada, are among the state's crown jewels. Rising 7,000 feet above the floor of the Great Basin desert, the Rubies are a majestic sky island harboring robust populations of Nevada's most cherished wildlife.

The largest mule deer herd in the state winters there. Streams are home to Nevada's state fish, the threatened Lahontan cutthroat trout. Sagebrush-covered slopes provide priority habitat for the imperiled greater sage grouse.

Drilling and fracking contaminate watersheds, drive down wildlife populations and cause permanent harm to our climate.

Do not sell any more public land for corporate greed, profit, and waste.