Comments: No, do not open the Ruby Mountains Wilderness to oil and gas leasing. The 54,000 acres are a gem and popular for hiking, fishing, hunting and camping. Exploring for oil and gas and the water pollution and destruction of a bio rich area. I realize that Zinkle's mission is to give fossil fuel companies access to public lands that have never been open to them at a fire sale price.

This land is owned by the public and is meant to be preserved for future generations, not as one more place that fossil fuel companies can exploit, pollute and destroy. Especially with Pruitt and Zinkle's view that regulations and transparent environmental reviews are not necessary.

Thanks!
