I understand the goals of the Forest Service is to utilize natural resources and provide usage for the public. The changes in the USA is a gradual increase in population (and increased need for all types of public land availability). However, as our technology has advanced, we now have mobility becoming available at an even greater rate. This mobility is in the form of off highway vehicles such as ATVs and side x side vehicles to a large extent. Horses and hikers can go most anywhere on forest land, vehicles can't.

Generally, and simply, all classification and modifications in land use should be geared towards the accommodation of the changing dynamic.
