Comments: I am in favor of the 'no action' alternative, whereby you do nothing. Moving these goats presents several problems, which I will outline.

You will be contributing to global warming through greenhouse gas emissions in excess of your current levels by fossil fuel burning during roundup/capture/relocation.

You will upset the ecosystem balance in the existing homerange and wherever you decide to transplant these goats. There is abundant evidence of this re-balancing and the negative effects that occur (Yellowstone wolf removal and reintroduction, wolf introduction in Washington State).

You will be wasting taxpayer dollars on a minimal safety issue (someone was head-butted by a goat) and ignoring the general public's safety with regard to existing issues (cougars and wolves in Washington State).
