Comments: I have only been snowmobiling twice in Ca, but have had the desire to go more. On that note I generally travel the same route but would explore more options. Taking away riding areas won't help. My point, is California willing to give up potential tourism dollars to many other states? I know that CA isn't the only battleground where groups and the government are closing public land. It is our public land too and from my experience the snowmobile community has been great stewards of policing and taking care of these lands. Share and share alike I think is a better approach? Stay strong sledders!

Sincerely,
