

Data Submitted (UTC 11): 10/9/2018 12:24:09 AM

First name: Ian

Last name: Aiton

Organization: High Country Octane

Title: Member

Comments: Snowmobiles do not destroy the land. They ride on top of the snow. They create a hard packed snow track behind them. And I have even seen animals using the paked snow to walk on instead of trekking their own path. I am also a responsible advid dirt biker. As a dirt bikes have designated trails, snowmobiles do not. We have areas where we can and can't ride. Also I work for a snowmobile rental shop, and I have customers that come back every year because of how much fun they had. So the way I see it is if this is taken away from us, well that is one less thing people can't do to enjoy the outdoors. One last thing if this is taken away from us, who is going to be out there to enforce this? Where's the money for that going to come from? And in my eyes, the "enforcement" would be out there riding to find "unlawful" riders as well. That sounds like it's contradicting to me.