Comments: Looking at the Stanislaus forest map. The majority of it is wilderness, snowmobiles have a small portion to ride. Reducing riding areas would be very dangerous with too many sleds in one place. We need to keep the near natural areas open to OSV's. The other group opposing us must be very selfish, they have a lot more places to go than us if they want it quiet. We appreciate the areas that we have to ride our machines and take care of them. Snowmobile green stickers and snow park passes pay for the grooming of highway 109 and Highway four. We like it steep and deep, and lots of those areas are the natural ,our favorite is 7000 to 9000 feet , snowmobiles have evolved and so have the riders, we are mountain riders not just trail riders. I hike these in your natural areas in the spring and summer time, and love them, I have seen no trace of snowmobiles once the snow melts. For those of us who ride this is a passion like no other, the views and the pure beauty of the Forest covered in white is amazing. Let's keep this forest accessible for everybody not just a select few
