Comments: The Wilderness of Alaska is SACRED. There is nothing like in anywhere in the lower 48. I am against any exploitation of these lands. The Native People of Alaska as well as the many non-native peoples who consider themselves Alaskans live a life of sustainability, and depend on food and clean water as well as small amounts of timber for building their homes and keeping fa fire during the dark months of the year.

The non human life of every species is facing Global Warming, as are the villages, some of which had existed for a thousand years and some more. This is not the time to apply more pressure on a land where their Glaciers are melting away and difficult changes ate occurring everywhere, on both land and sea. I urge you to carefully address the scientific consensus as to what is happening in Alaska and throw your support to relieve the suffering of those who will certainly be suffering as a result of Global Warming, and who will need a great deal of help for their communities. I urge you to not fall prey to the those who want to devastate the Kant for 'personal or corporate' gain. Alaska represents one of the most enduring and beautiful gifts that America has to offer the World.
