Comments: Taking away such a substantial amount of forest land, would devastate the great people of this state, not only do we use it for great, recreational purposes to get out and enjoy the nature with great friends and family, whether summer or winter, but it helps feed the people of this state with organic, wild roamed meat, where we can assure what we are eating, is best possible for us. In a sense, taking this land away, would be essentially be taking away apart of our home. Especially of those who live in the Southern region of Alaska. Taking away such large land area would then crowd other accessible land areas, therefore causing a possible overcrowding, and over harvest of land and animals. Isn't this what the proposal wants to essentially protect? Removing one land, does not save the rest. Alaska needs that balance of accessible land for recreation. We already have lands that are protected by Parks, native land, and government. Here in Alaska, we live here because we are free, and protect the land as best possible, ourselves. Keep Alaska free.
