Comments: To whom it may concern,

I'm a life long Alaskan, born and raised here, and I was dismayed to hear that there is currently an open review being held to change access to the CNF. It saddens me to see efforts put into effect that would exclude an entire industry and culture of winter outdoor activity. Of course, no one ever tries to hinder the skiers, snowshoers, or the snowboarders. It's always limitations on snowmachines that we see purposed. Do they ever offer to open up old lands that we could once ride but now can't? Of course not. It's always take take take, until there is no more riding spots left. What makes other winter activities take precedence over ours? Surly the snowboarding and skiing on the motorized areas is just as good as the non-motorized, why should more land be closed off only to give it over to people that can already use it for their activities? Did we not learn to share when we were children?

In short: this Alaskan is opposed to any proposals to limit or change any of the motorized areas (winter or summer).
