Comments: Hello,

I am a lifelong Alaskan. Hunting, fishing, hiking, biking, cabins, lodges, they are all part of the wonderful place we get to call home. I have a whole family of outdoor enthusiasts. We take pride in living in the best place to be outdoors. Using a motor or not. When we're in the wilderness we take care of the land, we don't litter, we don't access places with snow machines, dirt bikes and four wheelers that are not aloud to be ridden. We don't "poach". We don't fish out of season. We obey the laws and love the outdoors. There is plenty of room for everybody to enjoy the chugach just how it is now. Now over the years the snowfall has declined tremendously. So most places we used to ride regularly don't even open up but maybe for a brief time every other year or so. Being a motor enthusiast has its limits and you limiting our areas would only make it harder. And I see more trash and junk laying on the sides of hiking, biking and skiing trails then I do where motorized use is acceptable.
