Comments: As an avid sno goer and ice racer, I cat attest to the need for public lands to be used by snowmobiles. Alaska is such a vast place, compared to other states, there is no need to limit any use, other than ares designated for non motorized recreation we have already. In most snowmobile ares, we see skiers and boarders take advantage of the rides the snogos give. Because alaska is so vast, wildlife is spread out too. In my 35 years of riding in Alaska, I've never had to compete with wildlife for an Area to ride. Why restrict us?

Riders are also unique, in the way they take care of the environment. Picking up trash, shaming other riders misbehavior, and such, even keeps the bad apples in line. If you are against snogos being used in public lands, I encourage you to take a ride, and lift to appreciate it, before you cast judgement.

The flowers grow the best, in the middle of the winter trails. (True)
