Comments: The affected areas in the south central portion of Alaska that are affected by this will not only hurt the people who's use it but it will also affect local businesses and the economy.. The turnagain pass and the rising areas along the Seward are filled almost every weekend of the winter with hundreds to thousands of people. With out these areas being actively open there won't be sales in anchorage wasilla Seward kenai of snowmachines survival gear parts and fuel and oil for all these machines. It would be a huge hit to local business. These small businesses depended on these areas to be open on order to make money. I would say I probably get out to turnagain and into the chugach once or twice a year so my input from experience in these areas is limited but from a business stand point I've been in the snowmobile industry for 15 years and without these riding areas open local business would suffer and struggle to stay open.

Thanks
