Comments: Our world and society is driven by money and over and over we have seen public lands and wilderness area take the brunt end of the stick. Too often, there aren't enough people willing to stand up and fight for the lands that they love. If we bar others, ourselves and effectively our children from these lands, who is going to stand up and keep them wild and free? When life and all of it's constraints pull on an individual, they will not have the time unless they know what it's like to take in a view of the world from a mountain top, or have been able to simply spend the months worth of time in the trees and the rivers. Unless they have felt that greater connection with the nature around them, one day, when corporations and the millions if not billions behind them push to take land, the future generations will not fight back. Any one that prevents another from growing that love and connection with the natural world, Will Be To Blame. Request better, cleaner technology. NOT the selfish exclusion of others. I became a man in the mountains and hope that my future sons will one day be able to do the same. I beg of you, not to bar us off from these wilderness areas. Please, don't take away my second home. I am an advocate for the shared use of lands. I am an advocate for motorized use of public lands.
