Comments: I am all for plan B in the chugach national forest, the area is already restricted as is and the riders that ride most of the areas that are being threatend respect the restrictions and follow the rules. Most the areas are great for winter activity's and it's a good oputunity for the future generations to get out of the house and grow up where we did when we were growing up. The chugach is a beautiful places and I know that my kids would love to learn the area and grow up riding the same areas is did when I was young. Keeping people busy and outdoors during the long winter months in Alaska is a huge part of growing up here, most of the areas require a full tanks of gas in the truck and also snowmchine full of fuel and oil, by fueling up it is giving business to local stores and buisnesses, the money that we spend to go riding goes back into alaska economy
