Comments: Cutting down or removing access to motorized vehicles in state parks would jeopardize and or possibly ruin many small Alaskan businesses that thrive in the winter. Motorized vehicle useage in Alaska is just as world renowned as the Iditarod. Reducing and or removing this will have a huge impact on Alaska residents and others that spend countless amounts of money to travel here during the winter to utilize these areas.

Reducing and or removing these access areas would be a financially terrible idea for small business owners, and even worse for the people that love motorized winter activities.
