Comments: To whom it may concern,

I rode my very first snowmachine at only 4 years old and I fell in love with riding not long after that. 15 years later my dad and I still go into Chugach National Forest almost every single weekend in winter and ride our machines. It is a bonding experience that I don't want to give up with my dad and it is a bonding experience that I want my kids to be able to have with their father and their grandfather in the future. I work as a mechanic that works strictly on snowmachines at A2D Sledworks, and I have been with A2D Sledworks for the last 3 years. I have now taken snowmachining to a whole new level as an extreme sport with my dad and a few friends.

I side with option B. I am strongly opposed to losing any more acres in the Kenai Peninsula because those are great places to ride and places that my father and I go often, if we and other riders lose more acres in that area then it will push all of the machines into a smaller area with inconsistent snow at those lower elevations creating not a lot of riding room.

Thank you for taking the time to read my response to the Chugach National Forest Revision process.
