Comments: I am 18 years old I have grown up accessing land in the chugach. I don't believe there should be a vote that puts access to public land at jeopardy. Alaska is known for its public lands and recreation opportunities that come along with that public land. Alaska is appealing to visitors from around the world because we have raw land and wilderness that allows us to recreate and have experiences you can have no where else. With out these opportunities this fact about Alaska may change. Responsible land use is important for the continuity of the land, however things can be done about responsible land use aside from closing it down all together. Snow machining has a relatively low impact on the grounds beneath it compared to many summer activities. It would be foolish to shut an important demographic out of the chugach.
