Comments: Please do not close the important and world famous King Mountain hang gliding and paragliding flying site by designating the Salmon-Challis National Forest in Idaho as wilderness area with no vehicle access. Additionally, freedom to access the airspace above the surrounding areas, including the Lost River and the Lemhi Range is important to me personally and the overall community of hang gliding and paragliding pilots in this country and the world. Unpowered ultralights, which include hang gliders and paragliders, are silent forms of personal recreational free flight with very low environmental impact and I feel that this activity should be allowed to continue in this area. Thank You.
