Comments: Protecting our remaining wild places and wild animals should be prioritized over any other goal in the process of managing America's forests. Human use, either for livestock grazing, recreation, oil and gas development or any other potential use, should be secondary and, if necessary, prohibited entirely if there is any threat to wilderness. I support Alternative D in the current plan but it should be expanded to include the entire 230,000 roadless acres of the Gallatin Range. There should be no motorized vehicles allowed. Wilderness areas should be left alone for the most part so as to remain wild forever.
