Comments: I would like to voice my preference for option 'D' of the plan, since it has the most new wilderness of any of the others. Here are some of the reasons I think that's important.

1. I believe that the hard work and self-reliance required of a wilderness experience help build confidence and focus. These qualities help people get through the rough patches in their lives and can actually help people achieve their goals.
2. Wilderness is extremely popular. It's becoming too rare, and the existing wild areas are becoming overcrowded.
3. We don't have a responsibility to make hunting easy.
4. Motorized travel is seductive. It's fun and easy, but before long, so many people driving into an area eventually trashes it, and then motorized travelers start clamoring to ride in the parts they haven't yet destroyed.
