Comments: People vacation in the secluded state of Montana for much more than a weekend getaway, they come to connect with the wild and live simply. I just finished my Freshman year at Montana State and I've learned that my happiest place is in the mountains, away from all the non-sense of meaningless everyday problems. If I didn't have the wilderness to go to at my darkest of times I would have taken my life by now. Some places I visit regularly are Hyalite Canyon, Revenue Flats, Fairy Lake, and the Crazy Mountains. My friends and I made many memories in these beautiful spots, memories that will last a lifetime. The need to be wild is a primal trait that I believe is born into every human. Without a place to express our inner beast, we will all surely go insane.
