Comments: These are very special places. Basically undistributed by human development.

With so many of the citizen of this State and our Country wanting to see the wonder of these wild places in Montana, they have become more valuable for what they are now. We have now reached the point where people are coming to Montana to see these wild places by the millions, making these lands the second largest source of income in the state.

We have seen what happens in this state with extractive industries and the cost to tax payers for the reclamation of these lands.

These wild place are worth more than any thing that can be taken from them, other than the feeling of awe, wonder and thankfulness for the fact that there are still wild places that can loved.

We have a the responsibility to make sure the greed of a few does not overshadow the spiritual power and wonder of these special places.

Do the right thing and allow these places to be as they are now for generations to come and experience.
