Comments: The proposed ban on packgoats for multiple forest areas should be eliminated from current forest management plans. Packgoats would move quickly through an area when used for hiking and would not affect the environment. People camping with packgoats would have goats in a very small area for maybe a few days and again there would be minimal impact on the vegetation. Packgoats are not common enough here to affect wildlife and therefore a ban should not be considered. This ban would limit my access to my public lands. Packgoats owners should be able to enjoy this recessional activity. We have less effect on the environment than horses.
