My main concern is the lack of accountability by businesses with permits that make money on public lands, i.e....mountain guiding , off-road, hunting, and so forth. My observations are that these businesses have a limited number of user days, but they do not adhere to the rules, they use as many user days as they want because the forest service isn't enforcing the rules. This is unacceptable because these businesses know they are breaking the rules but they don't care. I know of an off-road tour business that had only a handful of user days, but actually used several hundred, confessed by the owner. If the forest service isn't going to enforce its own rules then get rid of the rules so we can ruin our forests as fast as possible and get it over with, that's what these businesses are doing.
