Comments: I spent two beautiful summers sea kayaking from island to island and learning at a field school in the Tongass National Forest. I not only learned about the terrestrial and aquatic ecology on a personal level but I also learned about the local communities and their tie to that forest. Enabling more logging on POW (which I have a personal relationship with) and other special places will impact the salmon runs, forest ecosystem and subsistence hunting and gathering. I urge to to stand against allowing more roads which in turn allows more logging and in turn allows the destruction of a critical carbon sink. Is no place sacred anymore?
