Comments: I find it deeply disturbing that the federal protectors of national forests are looking to profit from the leasing of oil fracking rights in a highly populated area that is directly connected to a surface water source for millions of people.

I question the moral and ethical values of those proposing this idea and would hold responsible those who would act on such a reckless course.

Most people would agree that laws in force to prevent people from harming others are a good thing. Just because we can, and even if we just want to, we are not allowed to do harm to others.

How is that different than passively exposing millions of people to possible harm?

Is this the way the stewards of the federal government now behave?

Just because you can does not mean you should.

Respectfully submitted,
